Story The long-awaited day has arrived. The day of the final battle between the Elden Lords. The three Lords, each a titan, have all gathered to this place where the center of the Elden Ring is located. The three are the Lords of Twilight, Darkness, and Wind, each strong and powerful and fully prepared for the fight. The Lords were summoned from their respective lands and prepared for combat. The three began to engage in combat. Each fighting with his own way. And then a vision befell him. The Darkness Lord was in a strange land. He entered the land and was blinded by the sun. The Lord seemed to have gone mad. The Wind Lord came across a lost and troubled soul, a young man named who suddenly stood up and challenged him. The Wind Lord's troops were able to take the young man into custody. The Darkness Lord was troubled at this unknown young man, and a mysterious power awakened in him. A new power that could not be controlled. Those voices are the State Department. There is no single voice. There is an amalgam of opinions among the policymakers, like a big speech by National Security Adviser Susan Rice denouncing the so-called anti-Muslim video produced by a pastor in Florida. President Obama and his advisers have to consider all of that. The commander in chief must balance the desires of those who work for him and what he thinks the country needs in terms of security and diplomacy. He's a very pragmatic and forward-thinking president with a very pragmatic foreign policy. It is surprising to me that Romney would not consider his own brief tenure in office when he was an elected governor and the person who had to sign a bill to formalize the 287(g) program, which allowed local police to act more like immigration agents and turn a blind eye to illegal immigration. While he was governor of Massachusetts, Romney signed legislation that allowed local police in the state to check the immigration status of

And that's the issue. A: Remove the border-top:0 from this CSS: `div.row { margin-top: 18px; border-top:1px solid black; background-color: inherit; }` This is making it so the div has a border-top, which is pushing your content down, instead of creating the extra space that you want.

Anti-Brexit protestors picture themselves walled in with concrete gates in front of the Houses of Parliament (Picture: AFP/Getty) Anti-Brexit protesters have said that after voting in favour of leaving the EU in last month's referendum, they are determined to never see the back of Britain's EU membership. Spanning almost 100 activists, the majority of whom have been coming from the People's Assembly Against Austerity, and who arrived on Tax Island today, vowed to trap the British government in a concrete wall between them and the Houses of Parliament in Westminster. The protesters have hoisted a sheet of brown paper over an old plastic barrels which they then hurriedly covered with stone and mortar. Anti-Brexit protesters (Picture: Reuters) One group used machines to pump air into the barrel, while a second group attached a strong piece of rebar around the premises they have covered. The groups are then planning to try and apply to cover the rebar with what is claimed to be around 600 tonnes of concrete. These images show a view from across the Thames (Picture: Reuters) The handful of activists - who described themselves as anarchists - said they were planning to stick to their tenacious action for as long as it took for the government to eventually move out of the country. Setting themselves to pump air into what they describe as a 'concrete box', one protester from the People's Assembly Against Austerity said: 'We want to stay outside, there's no amount of negotiation we can do that will change the Single AppEngine Channel API - Single Messages I'm using the new AppEngine Channel API and using a secure connection to send a message to a user. I'm writing the code for the server app from an Android App, and it works perfectly. But the Android client app is acting strangely. The server sends a message, but it seems to end before the client has time to read it. If I debug the channel API examples, the server succeeds, but all messages are blocked on the client. How can I get the messages through? (Is that even the correct way to send a secure message with the client side code?) If you need to see any code, comment and I'll provide it. Server app:

def send_message(message): n = private_channel_mgr.send_secure(message.encode('utf-8')) return n

 Client app:

onCreate(Bundle savedInstanceState) { super.onCreate(savedInstanceState); // request access to private channel httpChannel = new HttpChannel(AppNameHolder.SERVER_URL, AppNameHolder.CLIENT_KEY); httpChannel.authenticate(); private_channel_mgr = new ChannelManager(httpChannel); // call the server to
